

BRIGHT RAIMENT TO-DAY

BONNETS AND GOWNS WILL DIVIDE HONORS WITH THE MUSIC.

Straw Hat and Fans Will Be Side by Side—An Absent-Minded Woman's Experience.

This is the day of the year when fur coats and straw hats will sit side by side in the church pews, when the lank feathers of the winter bonnet and the latest lace caps will be companions; when the men and women who seek to have their new spring clothes ready for Easter will appear in them, if the weather is at all propitious. Of all the seasons the variety of garments is more noticeable Easter Sunday than any other time. It is the day when eyes will wander over the congregation to see what new clothes, hats and wraps have made their appearance and when the elaborate musical programmes will take all the glory from the pulpit. Of all services, the sermon of Easter Sunday is heard in its entirety and with full understanding by fewer people than there are more in the church. The milliners and modistes have been rushed to the verge of desperation getting flowers and ribbons on the right bonnets and hats and fitting the garments which have been brought to them to fashion. The craze for the dress to-day is as sure to come as the day. Had Easter come two or three weeks ago the rush would have been the same. No matter at what date the church festival falls that is the day for the new things.

There is a well-known young married woman who is said to be somewhat absent minded on occasions. Friday she rode down town on her wheel. She looked as fresh and natty in her new wheel suit as she ever did in her most bewitching ball gown. She arrived in front of one of the big dry goods stores, left her wheel outside and went in to do her shopping. She came out, mounted and rode away. She had gone several blocks and did not feel as comfortable as she thought she ought to feel, and looking closely at her dress, found she had a strange one. It was not hers. She turned and fairly screeched and found a woman walking past her in the most nervous and excited state of mind. As soon as the wheel came near she sprang upon it, and the absent-minded woman found her own wheel just where she had left it, and sprang off. She went to another shop and left her wheel outside. She found the time she came out, walked a square and a half to a car, and found it was not hers. She turned and fairly screeched and found a friend entered the car and sat down by her. As they were talking, she noticed that she thought the lady was so sensible to wear her wheel suit down town to shop, instead of a dress, that she was in the mood to dress as she had seen the lady do. She turned and fairly screeched and found a woman walking past her in the most nervous and excited state of mind. As soon as the wheel came near she sprang upon it, and the absent-minded woman found her own wheel just where she had left it, and sprang off. She went to another shop and left her wheel outside. After a lapse of fifty years the art of silhouetting has been revived, and is at present enjoying a vogue in Europe. A half century ago it was the fad of the upper classes abroad, but its popularity waned upon the advent of photography, and the rapidity of the development of that art caused it to be forgotten. But of late interest in this peculiar art has been revived, and silhouettes has assumed such proportions to reach the dignity of a society fad. In the olden days the art was not confined to professionals or to portraiture. In the early part of the present century, the cutting out of figures from paper was a very popular social diversion. The subjects were generally of still life, such as common articles of household furniture. Amateurs with a decided talent for silhouetting used to attempt animals, and in cases of exceptional genius panoramic landscapes. The old English holiday fairs used to have some of such of the silhouettists as did not have a fashionable clientele in the large cities, and returned to their native country, where families used to sit for their paper likenesses, to these wandering artists. The abolition of these merry gatherings has been a great deal to do with the public having lost track of the art in recent years. As some of the exhibitions of late some old silhouettes were shown, more as curiosities than as having anything of a contemporary interest, and interest in them was thereby revived. The portion of the fashionable set who were interested in them, have ancestors, overhauled the family relics and old oaken chests of the generation before them, and in many instances, taken this method of handing counterfeit presentments of themselves down to their posterity.
